The jilting of granny weatherrall pdf answers free printable version

.....The story is told in third-person point of view by a narrator who frequently reveals the thoughts of Granny Weatherall in language that Granny would use if she were speaking. Type of Work and Narration.....Katherine Anne Porter's "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" is a short story told partly with a narrative technique known as stream of consciousness, a term coined by American psychologist William James (1842-1910). Consider the following passage: It was like Cornelia to whisper around doors. 3...Granny indicates in her deathbed reflections that she loved John. Cornelia was dutiful; that was the trouble with her. I want him to know I had my husband just the same and my children and my house like any other woman. She thought again of Cornelia, of how she would say, "Don't cross her, let her have her way, she's eighty years old." Granny had a mind to pack up and go back to her own home so she wouldn't have to put up with such nonsense. As far as being old is concerned, Granny notes to herself that Lydia still drives eighty miles to ask for advice on handling her children, and Jimmy comes over to get her opinion on business matters. And then, the narrator says, there was the business of the letters in the attic: "George's letters and John's letters and her letters to them both—lying around for the children to find afterwards made her uneasy."When she was sixty, Granny began preparing for death by visiting her children and grandchildren, thinking it would be the last they would see of her. About having them pick all the fruit so nothing went to waste. Then she remembers the day she was jilted. Father of Granny: Man who lived to age 102. Granny, about eighty, is lying face up in the bed. Because of her illness, she is lucid one moment and disoriented the next. Figures of Speech.....Following are examples of figures of speech in the story. Alliteration Repetition of a consonant sound Lighting the lamps had been beautiful. All as surely signed and sealed as the papers for the new forty acres. Irony Development that is the opposite of what is expected Cornelia says to Granny, "Oh, is there anything you want to tell me? There's a good chance that she was. But when she recovered, she decided to live on for a long time. after three days [He will] rise again. report this ad She is dying of an undiscovered illness. Never really a member of the so-called Lost Generation. Porter nonetheless published "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" and "Magic" alongside the works of James Joyce, Gertrude Stein, and Ernest Hemingway, all of whom went to Paris while Porter went to Mexico. "But why does she keep his letters to her? It's bitter to lose things. But Granny lived up to her name by weathering all her losses. ... She credits Porter's story for speaking the political potential of patois.....But Cornelia informs her he had last checked her in the morning, that is, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matthew 27:46). When Granny dies, the narrator says, she "stretched herself with a deep breath and blew out the light." Of Christ's last moment, John 19:30 reports, "Jesus said, 'It is finished.' With that he bowed his head and gave up his spirit." ..Granny's Attitude Toward Cornelia, HapsyIn her deathbed reflections, Granny resents Cornelia's dotting presence. The thing that most annoyed her was that Cornelia thought she was deaf, dumb, and blind. Her father had made it to a hundred and two, claiming that a noggin of strong toddy each day accounted for his longevity. There they were, made out of her, and they couldn't get away from that. She made out her will, then got sick. I want a lot of things. John died young but Granny carried on, rearing the children, working her farmland and orchard, and caring for animals. Without Thee, my God, I could never have done it." On her deathbed, she has a notion that she will even overcome her fatal illness: "She was strong, in three days she would be as well as ever. (John 2:19) The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. Cornelia: Daughter of Granny. Did she really? In your opinion, what was the "something not given back?" However, the version that the majority of us read and teach is not the one she originally published. Cummings...© 2010Doctor Harry feels Granny Weatherall's pulse, but she pushes him away, saying, "Get along now. (Luke 24:7)At the last moment of her life, Granny believes God has forsaken her, saying to herself, "Again no bridegroom and the priest in the house." This passage calls to mind words spoken by Christ on the cross: "And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying: Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? By engaging with these materials, students will: Articulate what is stated in the text explicitly and implicitly Identify point of view and setting Analyze how complex characters think and behave Discern the author's intent and its effect on readers. John: Deceased husband of Granny. Doctor Harry: Granny's physician. Hapsy: Daughter of Granny and, the narration says, the only child Granny "really wanted." The story implies that she has preceded her mother in death. In her 2015 article, "Katherine Anne Porter, Magic, and transition," Kerry Hasler-Brooks charts the role of "Magic" in the transformation of Jolas's magazine from a transnational monthly into what Jolas subtitled "an international quarterly for creative experiment" (222). "Was it because she had never forgiven the man who jilted her? George: Man who abandoned Granny on the day he was to marry her. Even though the later version does not make explicit all the ambiguous parts in the original, a comparison of the first one published with the version collected just seven months later reveals that Porter made significant changes that merit exploration and that somewhat clarify the protagonist's relationships with other characters. Then one of the children—Hapsy, her favorite—died, too, after bearing a child of her own. The trick is to persevere. Oh, no, oh, God, no, there was something else besides the house and the man and the children. Using this resource for structured guidance, students, ultimately, will present information, conclusions, and supporting textual evidence clearly, concisely, and appropriately, thereby helping their peers comprehend their thinking. But after all the work she had done—even digging post holes for fences—he probably wouldn't recognize her. "For sixty years," the narrator says, "she had prayed against remembering him." Her prayers are an acknowledgment that the memory of George has remained firmly lodged in her mind. She committed a sin that she believes has jeopardized her salvation. The name Weatherall suggests that Granny believes she has weathered all the adversities of life. Don't let things get lost. Sometimes she wanted to see John again and point to them and say, Well, I didn't do so badly, did I?.....When Granny lies dying in the home of her daughter—facing still another loss, the loss of her own life—the repressed memory of George emerges to haunt her deathbed ruminations. When she thought of all the food she had cooked, and all the clothes she had cut and sewed, and all the gardens she had made—well, the children showed it. Soon it would be at the near edge of the orchard, and then it was time to go in and light the lamps. The lamp was lit, they didn't have to be scared and hang on to mother any more."But the memory of George comes back.The pillow rose about her shoulders and pressed against her heart and the memory was being squeezed out of it. Her perceptions and recollections favor her positive view of herself. Year of Publication "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" was first published in February 1929 in transition (uncapitalized), an English-language literary journal printed in Paris. Come in, children, don't stay out in the night air."In this vision of her past, she attempts to banish the memory of George (the fog) by taking the children inside and striking a match to the oil lamps. . Don't let your wounded vanity get the upper hand of you."Cornelia comes in and tells her mother that the doctor has arrived to look in on her. The left just five minutes ago," Granny says. For sixty years she had prayed against remembering him and against losing her soul in the deep pit of hell, and now the two things were mingled in one and the thought of him was a smoky cloud from hell that moved and crept in her head when she had just got rid of Doctor Harry and was trying to rest a minute. For sixty years, the narrator says, she had prayed against remembering George and now the memory of him occupied her as she was trying to rest. Their eyes followed the match and watched the flame rise and settle in a blue curve, then they moved away from her. It is the memory of the day—sixty years before—when her fiancé, George, jilted her. A painful memory, one she had repressed for sixty years, surfaces and haunts her at the hour of her death. Of course, she no doubt would have confessed her sin and performed penance, but she could have experienced lingering guilt. To what extent her repression of this memory impairs the quality of her life is uncertain. "A moment later she dies, said to them: Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. Already published in Century, she was still building her name, reputation, and confidence. She wishes she could see her late husband, John, to point out what a good job she did raising the children. 5. Write a psychological portrait of Granny. The narrator reveals her thoughts:Find him and be sure to tell him I forgot him. A year later, the story was published in a collection of Porter's stories entitled Flowering Judas and Other Stories. Find him and be sure to tell him I forgot him." Here, Granny's desire to find George contradicts her assertion that she has forgotten him—a bit of humor that lightens the deathbed atmosphere. Metaphor Comparison of unlike things without using like, as, or thanHer breath crowded down under her ribs and grew into a monstrous frightening shape with cutting edges. It should have been born first, for it was the one she had truly wanted." Notice that the first sentence says should be last, not was last, and that the second says should have been born first, not was born first. But John died young, leaving her to finish rearing the children. According to Joan Givner, the publication of these two stories in a magazine of international standing marked a turning point in Porter's career: "their completion was a significant achievement because they show that she was at last finding her own subject matter and establishing some control over it" (197). It may be, too, that she wronged John by allowing him to believe that all of the children were his. Her illness has muddled her thinking. In a flashback, Granny is speaking to her children. Consider, for example, that Granny underwent a humiliating public rejection when George jilted her and that she suffered through many trials, including "riding country roads in the winter when women had their babies" and "sitting up nights with sick horses and sick negroes and sick children." The suffering and rejection endured by Granny call to mind this Bible quotation: ("The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected by the ancients and by the high priests" (Mark 8: 31). Her eyes open, and the light is blue because of the color of the lampshades. "Digging post holes changed a woman. Hapsy's birth thus would have been a declaration of independence from George, whom Granny wished to banish from her mind. Father Connolly, a Roman Catholic priest, arrives to give her the last rites of the church. She always kept things secret in such a public way. 7. Granny represents everyone. This passage echoes the following Bible passages: And . She fainted you know" (238). They will also evaluate their peers' reasoning and use of rhetoric to advance claims, clarifying or challenging unclear ideas. The Title.....In the title, jilting can refer not only to the jilting of Granny by George but also to Granny's belief that God has jilted her. I don't need George."But was Hapsy the second child? Father Connolly: Roman Catholic priest who comes to give Granny the church's last rites. Sister Borgia: Nun whom Granny wants to send six bottles of wine for indigestion. In one of her internal monologues, Granny says, "When this one [Hapsy] was born it should be the last. He attributed his longevity to his practice of drinking a hot toddy every day. ... Is that why she couldn't go to heaven?" Porter responded that she did not know where she died, adding that "We all have too much to forgive." After a pause, Laughlin noted that her voice became "nearly mischievous," as she said, "But the first bridegroom had given her plenty." After receiving puzzled looks, Porter clarified: "The baby. With slight modifications to spelling, punctuation, and capitalization, this 1930 version of the story was reproduced in three subsequent volumes published by Harcourt, Brace during Porter's lifetime: Flowering Judas and Other Stories in 1935, a revision of sorts to the 1930 collection that published all of the 1930 stories and an additional four ("Theft," "That Tree," "The Cracked Looking-Glass," and "Hacienda"); The Old Order in 1955; and the version recognized as the definitive one, The Collected Stories of Katherine Anne Porter in 1965. A copy of the public domain short story and answer keys are included. Again no bridegroom and the priest in the house. The time is probably the late 1920s. Granny thinks about how he used to "drop in and inquire about her soul as if it were a teething baby, and then stay on for a cup of tea and a round of cards and gossip."Granny muses that she has no worries about her soul, for her "favorite saints" have already cleared her a path to heaven.Granny's perseverance and her faith in God enabled her to come through her difficulties, as she notes: "God, for all my life, I thank Thee. In "How I Accompanied Katherine Anne Porter on the Last Great Pilgrimage of Her Life," Charlotte Laughlin recounts a conversation she had with Porter regarding "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall." Like most readers of "Jilting," Laughlin was curious about the destiny of Ellen Weatherall. Why does the memory of him haunt her at the end of her life? Following in Christ's FootstepsGranny has many faults, not the least of which is criticizing others. After all, everyone struggles against loss—the loss of faith, hope, love, respect, self-esteem, prestige, loyalty, power, money, mental health, physical health, and even trivial objects such as car keys. She was always being tactful and kind. A good house too and a good husband that I loved and fine children out of him. She did so through her feistiness, her strong will to carry on, and her repression of the painful memory of the day George jilted her. I want you to find George. Study Questions and Essay Topics1. ...Granny says she prayed for sixty years to forget George. One of Porter's most popular stories, "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall" leaves many questions to ponder, among them the identity of the baby to whom Porter refers. Note the boldfaced letters in red that relate to the theme. Better than I had hoped for even. About calling the children in when a fog was creeping over the orchard, then lighting the lamps in the house so they didn't have to be afraid anymore. Wait, wait, Cornelia, till your own children whisper behind your back!One could interpret Granny's resentment of Cornelia as a sign that she is the daughter of George and therefore a constant reminder of him.Hapsy, on the other hand, is a favorite of Granny. Something not given back. It is now night. I found another a whole world better. For example, it is possible that she became pregnant with George's baby, then hurriedly married John after the jilting to avoid the stigma of bearing a child out of wedlock. 2. ...Why is Granny concerned about the letters in the attic? The children huddled up to her and breathed like little calves waiting at the bars in the twilight. Tell him I was given back everything he took away and more. "She was never like this! ... never like this!"Cornelia's kindness and attentiveness annoy Granny, and she pictures herself spanking her daughter. She could not remember any other sorrow because this grief wiped them all away. Don't let good things rot for want of using. Nevertheless, in her own way, she tries to follow in Christ's footsteps. Eventually, she married a man named John and bore him four children. This resource may serve as the basis for small-group discussions. First, her fiancé, George, abandoned her. Several recent articles read Porter's collected stories in relation to their original magazine publications. Is there anything I can do for you? Granny responds with these thoughts: "Yes, she had changed her mind after sixty years and she would like to see George. Because Granny is disoriented, these thoughts focus on present perceptions one moment and on old memories the next. I want you to pick all the fruit this year and see nothing is wasted. Crafting her story in 1927, Porter first printed the tale of Ellen Weatherall's last day in the February 1929 (fifteenth) issue of Eugene [End Page 49] Jolas's transition, the literary magazine widely regarded as the most influential in shaping the modernist avant-garde. After she later married a man named John, she gave birth to four children. It was important for her to know the destination of her literary journey first so that she could set a course (like sailors and airline pilots) leading to the destination. . (Comparison of a human to a parrot)Fascinating Fact About the Author.....In an interview with Barbara Thompson (Writers at Work, 1963) Katherine Anne Porter said she always wrote the last paragraph of a story first, then backed up and wrote about all of the events leading up to the events described in the last paragraph. Wounded vanity, Ellen, said a sharp voice in the top of her mind. In a 1975 interview with Mary Anne Dolan of The Washington Star, Porter states that this "particular story has brought more letters from students and teachers. . SettingThe action takes place in a bedroom in the home of Granny Weatherall's daughter Cornelia. Endless darkness envelops her, and she asks God for a sign. A nurse has come in also. There's always someone who can use it, oh, no, there's nothing more cruel than this—I'll never forgive it."Here, Granny responds with typical feistiness—"I'll never forgive it."Death, beware.RepressionInstead of facing and dealing with the memory of George's jilting of her, Granny represses it. The publication featured experimental writing. The narrator says, It had been a hard pull, but not too much for her. Why, then, did she keep his letters? Hundreds of them in the last 25 years" (181). Flashbacks, however, date as far back as the late 1860s, when Granny's fiancé abandoned her on the day they were to be married. Characters Ellen (Granny) Weatherall: Feisty woman of about eighty who ruminates about events in her life as she lies dying in the home of her daughter Cornelia. There was always something to be done. She reviews the chores for the next day (perhaps her way of putting her life in order before dying), including folding laundry, putting the pantry in order, dusting the bronze clock. For sixty years, she keeps it locked in a deep recess in her soul. Her strategy succeeds for a moment, as the narrative reports: "Lighting the lamps had been beautiful. Don't let your wounded vanity get the upper hand of you.But, the narrator says, there is no sign. "Again no bridegroom and the priest in the house. Having sexual relations outside marriage is a grave sin in Roman Catholicism. First off, go away and don't whisper." The narrator later reports thatGranny could just hear Cornelia telling her husband that Mother was getting a little childish and they'd have to humor her. Granny's losses make their mark on her, as the following passage indicates. 6. Why wasn't Granny in a hospital? The last. Our customer service team will review your report and will be in touch. Although Granny asserts in her musings that she has weathered the hurt George caused, clearly the jilting has had a long-term effect. On September 11, 1930, the story appeared in revised form in Porter's first collection of short stories, Flowering Judas, a slim volume (comprising "María Concepción," "He," "Magic," "Rope," "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall," and the title story, "Flowering Judas") with a limited run of six hundred copies published by Harcourt, Brace that established her critical reputation. Jimmy: Son of Granny. She questioned: "despite all Granny Weatherall's good work, the priest had been in the house the second time and the 'bridegroom' had not come. (Mark 8:31) Jesus. With this technique, an author portrays a character's continuing "stream" of thoughts as they occur, regardless of whether they make sense or whether the next thought in a sequence relates to the previous thought. "Granny sees the blue light flutter and die. The moment comes when, in her disoriented state, her mind conjures the following scene: "A fog rose over the valley, she saw it marching across the creek swallowing the trees and moving up the hill like an army of ghosts. Oh, surely they were not all? Therefore, Hapsy was either the second or third child. Climax and the Questions It RaisesThe climax occurs when Granny cannot perceive the presence of God as she lapses toward death. Riding country roads in the winter when women had their babies was another thing: sitting up nights with sick horses and sick negroes and sick children and hardly ever losing one."Granny recalls other memories. She is experiencing a normal fear of death and the inability of humans to grasp fully the concept of God. Dutiful and good: "So good and dutiful," said Granny, "that I'd like to spank her." She saw herself spanking Cornelia and making a fine job of it.When Cornelia asks Granny whether she wants anything, Granny replies, "I do.
